

Section 3. (c).

DEVELOPING MY SELF.

"I learnt change is what shapes our lives and makes us the individuals that we are."

change. Developing self.	to what she is now as I've found these two courses	a person of belief and to become the concrete of	courage. From at a young each and every one of	age believing she was
us. After studying the	Indian, to then growing permanence of change, I	and learning of her
realised the only thing that	Aboriginal heritage, evolved
is permanent is change.	her through her life.
I read the novel Sally	not only can change
Morgan's, My Place which	be in one self, but for
is written in autobiography,	all those around and
shows her intriguing journey	Experiencing.
through life, brought her

Morgan's father died and her being quite a young age, as that then had to become of her life with no male figure. Her Grandmother which most of her change and self development came from then died when she was older. This was the best experience that took her for her experiences and changed her in a larger way possible. As we realised a change can be as many and as big as Sally Morgan's experiences and changes or to something as so	simple. After reading The Door by Miroslav Holub it then reminded me it only change can just be as small as it can be life changing. As Holub uses complete repetition repetition, 'Open the door.' This is used to show there may only be a breeze. But the door is Open . Open to many different things. Things that will allow us to change as people and individuals. I love music and songs can also reveal so many forms of change. After reading and listening to Ana's Song by Silverchair written by Daniel Johns, I realise change can have so many effects on one self, and also the people around.
---	--

'Ana wrecks your life like an anorexia life? As someone having such a disabling mind disease, can change your life forever. What reasons do we create this for?

It makes me wonder why people are sick and die. This changes everyone in some way or another.

All forms of change are altering and constant.

after studying the relationship of change in self, I now know to change is to develop yourself. change is a constant and reveals so many paths for a new life.