

Question 11 - Section 3

Elective 1 - Telling the truth

Frontline is a behind the scenes view of a current affairs programme. From studying Frontline I have gained insight into the idea of ethics in business. This has shaped my understanding of certain situations involving telling the truth. Frontline represents its characters in two ways. Their on-screen persona and their behind the scenes image. This allows me, the responder, to judge what is true or not. The situations in Frontline ~~also~~ have also shaped my understanding of telling the truth. The balancing act staged by the producers between ethics and business offers great insight into the world of media. From this I have learnt that what ever is said on the news or on television, there was a process involved in bringing out the final product.
