The United States were struggling for Victory over the viet kong. Although America is the most power nation back then and even now, the strategies which they used was beyond imagination.
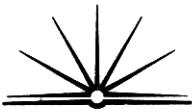

They used traps, such as a large hole with spikes underneath and bombs. Basically, they used Guerilla warfare against the most powerful. Geurilla warfare include camoflage as normal civilians, ambush, traps; and mainly fought in heavy tropical rainforest which was difficult for U.S. Soldiers to execute their mission. The Viet kong also had underground tunnels where the enterance was completely camoflaged and has numerous exit to ambush enemies. The underground tunnels were used as hospitals, peoples homes, armament storage, food storage, military training, and protection from Americans.

The U.S. forces did not imagine a Hollywood-like act (movies) can be done in reality. They were also not trained fully to position their safety and evaluate situations that involve something very rare, unusual, and fearful.

Even though, casualties deeply wounded the Viet Kong they still thought they were progressing and it was true. Americans did not know the situation enough that they were losing politically, militarilly, and morally. The message of democracy was completely denied, casualties ~~not that~~ raise from Guerilla warfare, and mornlly because the most powerful nation or race did not control and progress the objective they came for.

The struggle between America and North Vietnam did make Australia involve but the Americans took the lead, making soldiers suffer from enemies that they cannot see or determine I cannot imagine the pain and suffer the people that were involved in the war but we are certain that the war was not one by the Americans, leaving nothing but traces of blood, sweat tears which the soldiers tasted. The taste of bitter loss. Loss of lives and the opportunity to victory. Viet Kong were very smart to turn people's expectation around but seems as they lost or approximately the same amount as Americans. Politically, Morally, and militarally.