The belief system Buddhism is an eastern belief which holds many conservative ideologies and beliefs. As a belief system it questions existence of the world and the universe (or cosmos).

Unlike traditional religious belief systems Buddhism does not hold a hierarchy. ~~It~~ Its roles of gender is seen that men and women are ~~not~~ equal but also bases the social factors that males do produce more dominance.

Buddhism shows a practise of meditation, which has become a socially accepted hobby that shows not religious or belief ties within society.

The main ideologies and belief that Buddhism convey is the path to enlightenment (or nirvana). ~~Buddhism~~ Buddhism believes in rebirth, samara and Karma. All which have been an open topic within society.

Rebirth is the belief of after death the human spirit is reborn into the natural world again. ~~and~~ Samara relates to Karma and rebirth by depending on your karma, samara is like a spinning board which decides your creation when your spirit is reborn.

Karma is simply if you produce good things and actions, you will receive good for what you have done. ~~And~~ In the balance ~~if~~ bad thing receive bad outcomes.

This role of ideology and belief is the questioning of the afterlife which society holds.

~~and~~ The search for the future, in that being death. Buddhism believes the cosmos was created so that the path of enlightenment could be achieved.

with the functionalist theory. That is that conservative beliefs are continued but the evolution and modernisation of life must be considered.

With this the role Buddhism has upheld is nature is growth. It is against industrialisation as in weapons manufacturing as an example; which would destroy peace, harmony and balance.

The main role of Buddhism in society is to be an influence of peacefulness. Its ideologies and practises are open; ~~that~~ in result producing mindful-ness.

As a culture this belief ~~has~~ plays a significant role in society that allows its beliefs to be taught globally and allowing its ideologies to be understood through easy accessibility.
