

3 (i) The meeting at the house of Manlius with Catiline and his fellow conspirators.

(ii) They were ~~planning~~ planning. Catiline was choosing who was to go to the camp, ^{and} who was to stay in the city, in accordance with his plans.

(iii) It was customary for ~~the~~ Romans to pay visits of greeting to each other ^{in the morning}. Catiline planned to have murderers "visit" Cicero in the morning.

(iv) Cicero has just exposed the fact that Catiline has an extensive network of criminals and conspirators in the city. He argues that it is pointless to kill Catiline when he knows that there are many other criminal allies of Catiline in the city. Killing ^{just} Catiline would be of no use. It would be more beneficial for Catiline to leave with all his brigands and agents.
