

Section 2

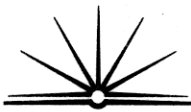

Q4. a) All hope of the Greeks and their confidence in beginning the war always rested on the help of Pallas (Athena). But indeed at the time when the godless Tydeus and Ulysses, the deviser of wickedness, ^{they dared to tear} ~~1. ~~the~~~~ the fateful Palladium from its sacred temple and snatch ~~from~~ the sacred image from ~~the~~ ^{the} guards of ~~at~~ its lofty altar, and they dared to contaminate the fillets of the maiden goddess with bloody hands, ...

- b) On all sides horror in mind, and at the same time they are terrified by the silence itself. From there I returned home, if by chance I could, if by chance it was allowed: the Greeks are everywhere and they are holding all the houses. Immediately the blazing fires roll to the highest pinnacles on the wind; flames burst forth, heat rages^{up} to the sky. I continue and I see the lofty citadel of Priam again: and now I come to the empty porticoes of Juno where guards and fierce Ulysses were protecting the Phoenix of the lectern. Here on all sides Trojan wealth snatched from the burning altars, both a table of the gods and bowls of solid gold, and captured vestments are collected. Boy and terrified mothers stand around in a long lines.
